

Contents

List of Contributors xi

Acknowledgements xiii

Dedications xiv

Preface xv

Introduction xvii

Theo Schofield

1 An introduction to basics 1

Elisabeth Macdonald

Summary 1

Why is good communication important? 1

Potential harmful consequences of poor communication 3

References 4

2 Fundamentals of good communication 5

Elisabeth Macdonald

Summary 5

Elements of good communication 5

Conversations in primary care, outpatient clinics and in hospital 6

Active listening 6

Physical surroundings 8

Linguistics 10

Time management 16

References 19

3 The ethics of communication 20

Michael Parker

Summary 20

Introduction 20

Ethical theory 21

The need for ethical communication 25

Challenges to ethical communication 28

Conclusions 30

References 31

- 4 Overall plan of management of difficult conversations 32
Elisabeth Macdonald
Summary 32
Introduction 32
First consultations 32
Subsequent conversations 34
Conclusions 35
- 5 The patient's perspective 36
Elisabeth Macdonald and Katherine Murphy
Summary 36
Views from the Patient's Association 36
Awareness of the patient's perspective 37
Patient preconceptions 39
Patient preparation for a consultation 41
Barriers to communication 43
References 44
- 6 The doctor's perspective 46
Elisabeth Macdonald
Summary 46
General perceptions 46
Special circumstances 49
 Intensive care: discussions concerning cardiopulmonary resuscitation 49
 Intensive care: withdrawing life support 52
 Organ donation 58
 Withdrawal of active treatment 61
The dying patient 62
 Advance directives or living wills 62
 Breaking bad news 64
 Breaking news of unexpected death 69
 Multiple bad news 71
 Breaking bad news with uncertain prognosis 71
 Discussion of medical risks 72
 Disclosure of errors 74
References 75
- 7 Dealing with strong emotions and difficult personalities 77
Peter Maguire and Carolyn Pitceathly
Summary 77
Dealing with strong emotions 77

	Reasons for distancing from strong emotions	78
	Problems posed by difficult 'personalities'	79
	Techniques for dealing with strong emotions	79
	Difficult personality types	82
	Conclusions	85
8	Difficult conversations with children and parents	86
	Melinda Edwards
	Summary	86
	Introduction	86
	Communicating with the child and family system	87
	Communicating complex information to children	92
	Giving emotive and sensitive information	96
	References	98
9	Special adult groups	99
	Elisabeth Macdonald
	Summary	99
	Talking to adolescents	99
	Non-compliant adults	102
	Talking to the elderly, the hard of hearing and the elderly frail	103
	Barriers to communication with the elderly	104
	Talking to the bereaved	106
	References	108
10	Difficult practical circumstances	109
	Elisabeth Macdonald
	Summary	109
	Telephone consultations	109
	Consultation through an interpreter	110
	Recording consultations on audiotape	112
	Conversations with spouse or partner	114
	Collusive relatives	115
	References	116
11	Communication in a multiprofessional setting	117
	Cathy Heaven
	Summary	117
	Differences in conversations	117
	Working with colleagues	119
	Communication within a multiprofessional team	121

Supporting colleagues 126

Conclusions 127

References 127

12 Communication in a multicultural society 130

Elisabeth Macdonald

Summary 130

General issues 130

Sensitive cultural questions: topics explored 133

Muslim and Arabic speaking families 134

Patients from the Indian subcontinent 137

Jewish patients and their families 141

Jehovah's Witnesses 143

The Afro-Caribbean community 145

Acknowledgements 147

References 147

13 Apologies in clinical medicine 149

Carmel O'Donovan

Summary 149

Introduction 150

Clinical risk management and governance 151

When things go wrong 151

Communication with patients 153

Verbal and listening skills 154

Liability 154

Confidentiality 155

Case studies 156

References 160

14 Legal constraints and guidelines to good practice 161

Liz Martinez

Summary 161

Society's expectations: 'not just Bristol' 161

Dispelling the myth 162

Litigation should be the last resort 163

What do patients want? 164

A brief word about criminal/disciplinary proceedings 166

	Practical recommendations for good communication	167
	Finally	170
	Summary of the law and practice relating to consent	170
	References	172
15	Maintaining a balance	173
	Peter Maguire and Carolyn Pitceathly
	Summary	173
	The demands of medicine	173
	Common pitfalls and solutions	174
	Conclusions	176
	Postscript: Practical tips for junior doctors on maintaining a balance (by Catherine Hood and Elisabeth Macdonald)	177
16	Conclusions and future directions	178
	Elisabeth Macdonald
	Summary	178
	The influence of computer technology on the doctor–patient relationship	178
	Internet support groups	179
	Future relationships	180
	References	180
	Useful internet addresses	181
Appendix I. Transcripts of useful illustrative conversations 182
Catherine Hood and Elisabeth Macdonald
	Summary	182
	Conversation 1: handling the angry patient (enacted)	183
	Conversation 2: a conversation concerning the relapse of cancer (enacted)	192
	Conversation 3: cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) (representative conversation)	193
	Conversation 4: sex and sexuality; taking a history (enacted)	196
	Conversation 5: raising issues of sex in hospital; acute abdominal pain (enacted)	200
	Conversation 6: conversation concerning unexpected death (enacted)	204
	Conversation 7: handling a difference of opinion over treatment; doctor's unwillingness to treat (representative conversation)	207
	References	208

Appendix II. A curriculum for communication in medical education 209

Theo Schofield, on behalf of the steering committee of the RSM Forum on Communication in Healthcare

Background 209

Methods 210

Underlying philosophy 211

The role of a junior hospital doctor 212

Core competences 213

Approaches to learning 216

Approaches to assessment 217

Conclusions 218

Acknowledgements 218

References 220

Index 223